Why Cotton?

Cotton is an ancient fiber with an important role in the history of human development. This valuable raw material is present in our daily lives in different ways and encompasses a series of benefits for human beings.

Sustainability

Cotton is a renewable and biodegradable natural fiber, which means it is a more sustainable choice compared to petroleum-derived synthetic materials.

New Consumption Habits

Cotton meets the demands of new consumers, who seek a return to natural raw materials and value their origin and sustainability of production processes.

Comfort and Soft Touch

It is known to be soft, comfortable, and pleasant to the touch. It is a natural fiber that allows the skin to breathe, providing comfort during use.

Versatility

It is an extremely versatile fiber, being used in the manufacture of a wide variety of products, from clothing, bedding, and towels to medical and personal care products.

Durability

Cotton fibers are very durable. Cotton products tend to withstand frequent use, maintaining their structural integrity over a long period of time.

Hypoallergenic

For people with sensitive skin or allergies, cotton is an ideal choice as it is less likely to cause irritation or allergic skin reactions compared to synthetic materials.

Moisture Wicking

Cotton has the ability to absorb moisture from the body, helping to keep you dry and comfortable. This makes the fiber a popular choice for sportswear, underwear, and swimwear.

Environmental Impact

Among the main fabric and clothing production fibers, cotton is the fiber that has one of the shortest decomposition times in nature.

Cotton: 1 week to 5 months

(Biodegradable, decomposes quickly depending on conditions)

Silk: 1 to 4 years

(Natural protein fiber, decomposes faster in moist environments)

Wool: 1 to 5 years

(Natural fiber, breaks down relatively quickly compared to synthetics)

Nylon: 30 to 40 years

(Synthetic, degrades faster than polyester but still takes decades)

Leather: 25 to 50 years

(Depends on whether it's treated or natural)

Polyester: 20 to 200 years

(Synthetic, depending on environmental factors and treatment)

Acrylic: 200 to 500 years

(Synthetic, resistant to biodegradation)

Cotton stands out as a natural, biodegradable fiber with minimal environmental impact compared to synthetic alternatives. Its quick decomposition, versatility, and sustainability make it a responsible and eco-conscious choice for industries and consumers worldwide.
